Wool Brokers, and Commission Merchants,

164 CONGRESS STREET.

Boston, April 21, 1869.

My dear Wendell:

For various reasons, I have concluded not to leave for New York until Saturday morning. Can you send me directions (so as not to put you to the trouble to come to the 27th street station for me) how I may get to the Hoboken ferry with the least unnecessary deviation? I will endeavor to meet you there; for I take it for granted that a train for Orange will run somewhere between 6 and 8 o'clock, P. M., giving me time to reach it. Sunday we can all be together. Will you please inform Oliver Johnson of this change in the time of my coming?

Our quasi free trade meeting was held last evening at Chickering's Hall, Edward Atkinson in the chair. It was a solid meeting as to the character and intelligence of those who were present, and the speeches were carefully measured in language and lucid in exposition. The proceedings occupy an entire page of the Journal this morning, in small type. I think you will be satisfied with the general tone of my remarks, especially as I availed myself of the opportunity to give business men a rub for their blind hostility to the Anti-Slavery movement. I will send you a copy.

Harry is quite sick to-day with a neuralgic attack.
Love to all the dear ones at the Park.

Your loving Father.
